Discussion:

UM-Columbia-

Aaron baker has a lot of experience in MACURH but not a lot of experience in his bid about NRHH.

UM-Columbia-

Pat has a lot of experience and we will gain a lot from his experience.

UMSL-

Pats bid has a lot of experience with his on campus NRHH.

NWMS-

Aaron has don a lot for his NRHH on campus and has done a lot for the RBD.

UMTC-

Pat has outside experience with GLACURH and will bring in new ideas for NRHH.

M S&T-

Both are grad students, this bothers me. Pats bid states that he's an advisor for the hall government. It seems that they have other focus' and I'm worried about that with both candidates. Both of their goals go inline with what we expect of a RAD. It comes down to the focus of what we want, an advisor or a first year grad student who is trying to figure it out. I don't honestly know which one is the better candidate. Take it into consideration. It's a big factor.

UND-

Both Pat and Aaron have the goals outlined but Aaron's goals are outlined in a way that I don't get lost in his words. I look at Aarons goals and see sections and subsections. He's got a really clear vision.

UMSL-

Both are grad students. Pat has been a grad student for a year. And probably knows how to manage his time. Aaron is going to be a new grad student who has to adjust to that and then adjust to being in a new position on the RBD that he hasn't had experience with.

UM-Columbia

Yield to redundancy

NWMS-

Aaron is a first year grad, but his bid shows that he is going to be able to pull off being a first year grad student, and the RAD with no issues.

M S&T

Aaron's goals that he outlined were not more than what we expect of a RAD, they are very basic with a lot of detail. Listing the detail doesn't mean that you know the job any better. Pat's bid shows a real depth of experience with being in more regions and schools. He has held a lot of positions in different governing bodies. It almost bothers me that he's an advisor for a year. This would help communications with the RAD, they need to be communicating quickly and in an understanding way with their schools. That kind of advisor edge will be a great benefit to MACURH.

Minnesota Morris-

In argument to the fine details in Aarons bid; planning that allows better organization and shows he read over the Policy Book.

Webster-

Their letters of reference show who chose to take the time and really want the bid.
Aarons bid has great letters of reference including one from his new Director supporting him. That's great.

UMSL-
